Social media can always help people to voice out their opinions, but it also serves as a platform where voices are heard at various levels too. #Social media is one of the most powerful platforms for reaching out to people, making them aware about many different things. But how far are we from converting this awareness into change? While the Internet has opened up possibilities for greater opportunities, its audience is becoming more and more globalized. The world has become a global village where information flows freely. We are now closer to each other than before. Globalization is becoming inevitable. It's good because it helps us to have better access to rights and opportunities that were not available before. Information about any country can now be accessed at the click of a button, but bad because that information might not always be correct or even biased in some way or another. #Social media makes it easier for people to voice out their opinions. And while the Internet is an enormous platform for information, it also serves as an avenue where voices are heard at various levels too. Despite its overwhelming presence, however, social media has its drawbacks. It features a lot of information, but not all of it is true or accurate. Media can be one of the most powerful tools in leading change, but only if that change is achieved through positive means. Media has shaped our society by influencing our behavior and thought process. It makes people who are not aware of certain things become aware through the use of different mediums such as newspapers and television. But while media can make us aware of different things, it can also share information that is not true. If the information shared is not true, then that leads to people receiving false or biased information. #People are the ones who are usually affected by the information shared in social media because they are vulnerable to misleading news. The media can influence our opinions and beliefs through diverse means such as television, newspapers, magazines, books and other forms of electronic media. Media does not necessarily have to be negative in nature. It only depends on how people perceive it or consume it. It shouldn't be used to spread misleading news about something just for the sake of getting more viewers or readership because it could have a negative impact on society in general.
