Social Media: Beware and Be Aware

Widespread technological advances can create great changes in society. Twentieth century technological changes such as cars, televisions and computers each had dramatic effects on our world, both positive and negative. In the 21st century, one of the biggest technological developments has been social media. Social media refers to websites and computer applications that allow users to create and share information, ideas, and pictures/videos in virtual communities. Like other technological changes, social media is changing society. Unfortunately, many of these changes are negative.

One of the most important of these effects is confusion between the meaningful relationships we have with friends and family in the real world and the casual relationships we have with hundreds of people on line. Social scientists say that many people spend a lot of time and energy on virtual "friendships" and sometimes ignore people in their lives. This can weaken real relationships.

No one can deny that social media can help people work. For example, many businesses are using it to communicate with their customers. Unfortunately, this can have a negative effect on productivity. Many employees spend a lot of time communicating with friends instead of doing their work. Indeed, one study reported that Facebook decreases office productivity by 1.5%. Similarly, students are often distracted by social media when using their computers to do their school work.

Finally, social media decreases privacy. Many people post a lot of information about their personal lives. They write things that strangers can read that they would never tell them in person. This information can be dangerous in the wrong hands. In addition, because the information remains online indefinitely, it can have serious consequences years after. For example, it may be fun to post pictures of you and your friends at a "crazy" party, but a future employer may not be so amused.

Social media is not going to disappear, but by realizing some of its dangers, we may be able to limit its most harmful effects. Use social media to your advantage. Beware of its dangers and be aware of how you are using it.
